The First

ROK-U.S.-China Future Forum

Program

INVITATION

How to secure American alliance and Chinese cooperation remains the foremost security challenge the ROK faces today. Moreover, not only have all three countries recently undergone dramatic changes in their external environments, but the domestic contexts upon which their respective foreign and security policies are based have experienced transformation in a way and to an extent that the ability of analysts and policymakers to anticipate and manage this transition is being called into question.

In order to assess the fast-changing dynamics of the relationships among the ROK, the U.S., and China, the Institute for Diplomacy and Security Studies (IDSS) and the Center for Contemporary China Studies (CCCS), both at Hallym University, have embarked upon the First ROK-U.S.-China Future Forum. With this year's theme of "The Changing ROK-U.S.-China Relationships and the Future of the Korean Peninsula," it sheds light on such significant subjects as "The Changing Domestic and External Contexts and Their Implications," "The ROK-China Relationship at 12," and "The ROK-U.S. Security Relationship after 9/11."

With the participation of the leading experts from Korea and abroad, the Forum purports to enhance mutual understanding among the three countries, provide a venue for their academic and policy community to share a well-informed opinion on a wide array of bilateral and regional issues, and alert their respective public and governments alike to the likely future challenges, thus contributing to the peace and prosperity in this important region and beyond.

We look forward to your participation and support.
